Developing Nations Scholarship Fund

The Developing Nations Scholarship Fund is transforming the lives of young people in developing countries around the world who will have an advantage as they enter the labor market: they will have an education and a degree in their own country that will help them with gainful employment. LifeNets has served students in the following countries:

- Chile
- El Salvador
- Guatemala
- Malawi
- Mexico
- Moldova
- Peru
- South Africa
- Zambia
- Zimbabwe

The average cost of tuition to attend University for a year in developing countries is $850 per student. LifeNets 2007 scholarship program is budgeted at $55,000. This may pay for only two or three college educations in the United States, but in our chosen developing areas it pays for about 65 students. LifeNets has provided well over $200,000 in scholarships since 2002.

My job has opened a new world of amazing opportunity, challenge and inspiration to me. The benefits of my education translate into every sphere of my life. I have become an independent, strong and open-minded person. My education has shaped me for the future."

Alida, El Salvador

"I'm finally an architect! My graduation was really beautiful and exciting. I had the honor to speak in the ceremony because I had the best grade of my class. Thank you for help, thank you for everything. This was only possible because of your help."

Ernesto, Peru

"My name is Ernesto. I always had the dream of studying in a technical school to improve my economic situation and help my family. Finally my dream came true and I am studying mechanics. Everything I am learning is so interesting; my classes are 50% theory and 50% practical. My classes begin at 7:00 am and finish at 6:30 pm. I am very grateful to LifeNets for helping me make my dream come true. I am beginning my second semester and I am determined to keep learning so in the future I could help some people the way I am being helped today."
